The reelection to the senate of Senator Beck of Kentucky, is a deserved compliment to an able public officer. His earnest advocacy of the silver dollar will be gratefully remembered by the men of the west irrespective of party. In point of ability and judgment Senator Beck has few equals in the senate.

The sincerity of democratic professions with regard to civil service reform was strikingly demonstrated by Speaker Carlisle in the appointment of a chairman of the house committee on civil service reform. Mr. Clements, who was named as chairman of the committee, in the last congress introduced a bill to repeal the civil service law.

Southern members of congress are not a unit in supporting the president's tariff policy. Representative Brown of Georgia in a speech a few days ago advocated the repeal of all the internal revenue taxes. In the great number of individual tariff theories which have recently been advanced, it would appear as if there would be little trouble in framing a tariff reduction bill upon which both parties could unite. Such a measure is hardly probable, but its passage by congress would set some republican statesmen on the search for a party issue for the coming campaign.

The Chicago dressed beef and canning companies have [illegible] proceedings before the interstate commerce commission against the transportation companies for imposing exorbitant rates. The claims which have already been entered amount to over $930,000. The companies lay the evils thought upon them to the inter[illegible] law, and a suit to test the constitutionality of the act will be brought in the United States courts. The railroads will plead that there has been no extortion but that the [illegible] complained of have been brought about by the abolishing of the pooling agreements. The result of these proceedings will be watched with interest.

Ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt, of New York, has developed into a full-fledged political boss. He has just succeeded in placing his candidate for speaker of the lower house of the New York legislature and retains his position as one of the quarantine commissioners of New York city, greatly to the harm of the city and the disgrace of the republican party. His term of office expired over four years ago, but the republican senate has refused to confirm any one nominated in his place. He has organized a systematic ring by means of which the treasury of the republican state committee receives large donations and substantial aid. In the meantime the public service is almost entirely neglected, and the health of the city placed in imminent danger. The trial, which was begun against him yesterday at Albany, it is hoped will result in casting him from an office for which he is utterly incompetent and which he has fully disgraced.

District Attorney Fellows, of New York, seems to be carrying out the policy which last fall his opponents declared he would adopt as soon as he was elected to the office. He has stated that he will not press the cases against the New York boodlers until the court of appeals renders a decision in the Ahearn case. But there is no law point involved in that case which can be applied to the cases against the other boodlers. Colonel Fellows' declaration is almost equivalent to an admission that these prosecutions are seriously begun by his predecessor Mr. Martine simply to be discontinued after a period of publicity has elapsed. The district attorney relies on the fact that he was elected by a large majority and that all his acts as a public prosecutor will be emphatically indorsed by the element which elected him. The evidence against the New York boodlers are positive and clear. All that is necessary to punish them for their crimes is an honest jury and an honest district attorney. Unfortunately for the advocates of honesty and good government there is some doubt as to the motive of District Attorney Fellows in this regard.

The London Times celebrated the fourth anniversary of its foundation a few days ago. In 1884 the Times rose to the position of the leading newspaper of the world. During the Crimean period and to the battle of Waterloo the Times incurred the enmity of the government, which deprived it of its facilities for obtaining information concerning the war between Austria and Napoleon. But by means of unusual energy and strategy the managers of the paper outwitted the government and the battle of Waterloo was announced in advance of any advice received by the government. On November 1, 1884, the Times was printed on the Walter press by steam. At first 1000 copies an hour were turned out. Every year improvements have been added from time to time so that at the present time the Walter press can produce a supply of the Times for London. Under the direction of Mr. Walter the Times became the greatest of Europe's newspapers and retained the name of. The [illegible] The career of this [illegible] cut short by his death [illegible]. The Times is still the representative English newspaper, and is often referred to as the Jupiter of the Press.

The more the temperance question is studied in its true bearing the more does it appear that it should not be made a political or a party question. The Chicago Journal in a recent issue gives the following idea of the way to complete temperance reform:

Georgia, Texas and Missouri have been turned upside down by conventions composed by opposition to the liquor traffic. But in neither of these states, nor in any other state, did the question of the question made any great political issue, nor are candidates on each side for office on the head. This vote on the question of prohibition at the elections, where the adoption or rejection of the measure is the issue, at least, would prove this policy. It would remove the question from politics and place it where it belongs, in the hands of the people of the state. At special elections held for the purpose of voting on prohibition there would be more time and opportunity for a full and deliberate discussion of the question by the people, and the voters who will not vote for prohibition candidates of general elections. There is a possibility that the prohibitionists can carry their ticket in opposition to both the republicans and democrats in any south or west. The only effect of voting for separate prohibition candidates at general elections is to place a certain democracy in power. Democratic prohibitionists never abandon their party candidates to support separate prohibitionist candidates. Almost the entire separate prohibitionist vote is drawn from the republican party, and the only effect has been to defeat republicans and to destroy all prospects of temperance reform, which this result has been produced. Every separate prohibition vote is a vote in favor of democratic supremacy with the continuance of the saloon and the whisky traffic in all forms under laws of democratic origin. Why do not republican prohibitionists see these facts? Why do they allow the white democrats of the south to be their superiors in wisdom and political strategy? The way to complete temperance reform is not by destroying the republican party, for it will not be destroyed. But if prohibition is to triumph, its triumph might be hastened by submitting the principle only at special elections and separating the question entirely from party politics.

His Prayer Was Granted.

Detroit Free Press.

During the summer of 1863, while the hospitals at Canton, Miss., were crowded with sick and wounded soldiers, the ladies visited them daily, carrying with them delicacies of every kind, and did all they could to cheer and comfort the suffering. On one occasion a pretty miss of 18 would stop from ward to ward, giving gentle words of encouragement to those around her, when she overheard a soldier exclaim, "Oh, my Lord!"

Stepping to his bedside to rebuke him for his profanity, she remarked:

"Didn't I hear you call upon the name of the Lord? I am one of his daughters. Is there anything I can ask him for you?"

Looking up into her bright, sweet face, he replied:

"I don't know but there is!"

"Well," said she, "what is it?"

Raising his eyes to her and extending his hand, he said:

"Please ask him to make me his son-in-law."

Dr. Prime on Yankee Cookery.

New York Journal of Commerce.

Dr. William C. Prime comes gallantly to the defence of Yankee cookery as compared with "professional" cookery in this country and French cooking abroad. I have before written that carriage travel in this country is more comfortable and delightful than in any part of Europe, with the single exception that our roads are vastly rougher. The inns have not on the average much superior to European inns, either British or continental. The literature of the last fifty years has a great deal to answer for in the romance which writers have attached to country inns in England and in some parts of the continent. The next only cash concealing of the books is a humbug. It has not existed anywhere in Europe within the past 50 years and it probably never so existed. Here and there in the world there was such an inn, and with this or that one for a model the writers of fancy and fiction have conveyed to the reading world the idea that all the inns one falls into along the English roads are the same; that in Switzerland the extreme in the roadside inns is one of rare delicacies among excellent cookery; that in France you are safe to find a Sayer in every country village and wine that needs no bush, wherever you stop on a journey.

One inn was so and so and that having to remain two days in the village, we lived three days on crackers and fruit which we bought at a roadside little shop on the village. Nothing happens like that now. Any article offered us on the table was very coming from. At another where we stopped for dinner we got a good but a dish of [illegible] in a general soup called wine and some [illegible] with tartar, offered on a black veneer over coloring a table and [illegible] in a [illegible] sheet with fried [illegible] and a hot [illegible] dish [illegible] in the yard close under the veranda. That was within four hours of Naples. I have found which of times in America but more appreciative of the [illegible] of many days in Europe.

Now let me describe another one in New England. We come up on the afternoon. It was a [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] A [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] A young [illegible] [illegible] little parlor.
